

For reasons of reaction control, which are known to the person skilled in the art, no absolute uniformity of substitution prevails in the target polymer; instead, a certain random distribution breadth of substitution is to be assumed. In addition, certain reactive molecular groups will also be observed crosslinking two or more polymer chains to give a more or less complex network, as the molecular scheme below also attempts to show.

